PREFACE.

In assuming the publication of the BUFFALO CITY DIRECTORY, we have not been so much actuated by a desire to make a profit from the transaction, as from a wish to add our mite to the public facilities, and perform the duties of citizens, zealous for the good of our young and thriving city. The former publications of this kind, have uniformly been unprofitable to those engaged in them; and if this volume defrays the expense of the collection of matter and publication, we shall think ourselves fortunate.

No pains have been spared to gather and collect the most accurate information, upon all matters embraced in this volume,—and if it still fails in some points, of the perfection that is desirable, it must be laid rather to the difficulties in the way of the collector than to any indifference to the best means of acquiring information. The population of our city, not only among mere residents, but among business and professional men, is so transient, that a perfect accuracy in many important points, is next to impossible. We have, however, done our best; and if suitably encouraged, shall undoubtedly improve as we proceed, in future enterprizes of this kind.

Although Buffalo has not suffered so much from the disastrous effects of that prostration of Commerce, which the whole country has experienced—yet on the revival of confidence and the restoration of the energies of trade, no city in the union will so rapidly rise from its comparative inaction, into a new and more promising state of existence. Already the genius of her matchless situation is at work, and new monuments of her enterprise are rising every where around us. A few years, or a few months, in such a state of improvement, will carry her so far above the rivalship or the doubts of the good people of any other city or town in the State, that a city directory will be all the argument necessary to confute their errors.

The importance of a work like this, grows with the growth of the city. Every year will make it, more and more, an indispensable aid to the business man. Imperfect as all former publications have been, they have been of incalculable benefit to those who have patronized them. That this may be the same, we have earnestly labored to make it as perfect as the circumstances of the case would allow; and with a desire to assist the developement of the fair fame of our city, more than to profit by the publication, we submit it, fearlessly to those who, feeling like us, are best able to judge of its merits.
